What has been your design highlight of 2013?

Lisa Hinderdael, DH Liberty

Frank Lloyd Wright once said, "Space is the breath of art." Interested in the architecture of illusion, our work last year focused on creating bespoke installations that play with illusion in a poetic way. Using the phenomenon of rain, we developed a "raindrop" light sculpture called INverted Umbrella. The programmed falling drops of light reflected in the mirrors create the illusion of a personal space; when in fact the space doesn't actually exist within the work.

We completed a project in Belgravia, the property encompasses everything LAWSON ROBB stands for. We tailor interiors and architecture to individual client's personalities and lifestyles rather than a 'one-fit' practice. We took a radical design approach and created a 'wellness' space with sauna, steam and gym on the top floor and a unique home cinema with oversized velvet day-bed. Every home is special and every home is unique.

Rebecca Tucker, Suna Interior Design

Hotel, bar and restaurant design is at the forefront of our minds at the moment. We have had some amazing opportunities to work on some beautiful projects, and have been inspired by designs across the globe, from an eclectic bar in New York, utilising found objects and reclamation materials, to high end luxe hotels demonstrating the most up to date materials and technology.

Helen Fewster, Suna Interior Design

We are starting the New Year with a bang as we have been shortlisted as finalists at the forthcoming KBB Awards for our work at The Orchard for Mount Anvil. This development represents a design trend that was very evident throughout 2013 and is destined to continue into the 2014. We designed an interior that combined rich and rough materials to provide an eclectic, urban environment to appeal to the designer/creative market living in Clerkenwell.

One of the highlights of 2013 for myself and the company has been to work on a large house in Central London. The client's brief was to refurbish the main reception rooms in a traditional style and create a more contemporary design in the lower ground family rooms. The project was a wonderful success as it complimented the existing architecture of the house with the more structure kitchen and adjoining relaxing living area.
